NEWS RELEASE

Norwich graduates first class of Master of Science in Business Continuity

NORTHFIELD, Vt. – Norwich University's Master of Business Continuity Management (MSBC) program graduated its first class on June 11, 2010.

Fifteen business continuity professionals from a variety of fields, in the public and the private sector, completed the degree online in 18 months of continuous study.

The coursework was capped by a one week residency and graduation at the university's Vermont campus. Students at the residency engaged in professional conferences, discussions, seminars, and other academic and social activities to cement relationships with one another and strengthen their connection to the university.

The Master of Business Continuity Management program provides a comprehensive and in-depth understanding of all aspects of business continuity--including plan development, incident response, risk management, plan testing, and auditing.

Norwich University was recently awarded a chapter of the Epsilon Pi Phi Honor Society, which recognizes exceptional students and programs in emergency management, homeland security, and business continuity. A number of current students have been accepted into the prestigious society.
